ON THE SCENE

RECORDS

Matching tenor Fritz Wunderlich's age with the youthful ardor of Shubert when he composed Die Schöne Müllerin (None such) adds a memorable quality to this release, whether the lyric cycle calls for tenderness or reflection. This disc, in pseudo-stereo, was recorded in 1957 by the late tenor who was ably accompanied by Kurt Heinz Stolze.

Aficionado of the great German soprano will welcome the new release of An Elizabeth Schwartzkopf Song Book, Volume 2 (Angel). Presenting 18 vocal selections, the album is fluid in presentation, a worthy work of this stellar personality. Accompanied closely and tastefully by Geoffrey Parsons, Miss Schwartzkopf sings Schubert, Schumann, Strauss, along with some Russian works and two Mozart compositions. This is not a recording of a live concert, but a more precise and very rewarding addition to Volume 1.

Famous Tenor Arias (Westminster) is Barry Morell's recording debut, pulled off with grand style, covering as it does 13 of the killer-dillers for that voice range. With the Vienna Volksopern Orchestra and the Vienna Academy Choir, Argeo Quadri conducting, Morell emotes through Macbeth, A Masked Ball, La Gioconda, La Boheme and others. Substantial evidence to back up the high standing among the world's tenors that Morel, an American, enjoys.

W. C. Fields, despite his cult of followers around the world, has up to now been available on only one recording. Never mind that Fields would sneer at such emotion but W. C. Fields (Decca) is an enterprise of love, filled with brilliant snatches from more than a dozen of his films. Fields was a matchless sight comic but he won stardom on that most difficult of media, radio. This release should again make his characteristic nasal delivery a household sound.

Two discs combining Joan Baez's voice and delivery with Bob Dylan's haunting songs spells the makings of a best-selling album. Any Day Now (Vanguard) includes the fine "North Country Blues," and a few of Dylan's better known tunes. The lesser known titles are real gems as Joan delivers them. She's not lost that certain magic quality.

Folkways Records has released another gem in its diadem of folk music recordings. Leadbelly: Take This Hammer (Folkways) is a cross section of the great singer's well-known style. From "Good Mornin' Blues" to "Good Night, Irene," Leadbelly's rich voice is evidence of the strength and joy of his days. Alan Lomax and Fred Ramsey Jr. have chosen 20 of the best-loved of American folk songs performed by one of America's best loved folk artist.

The most gifted group to come out of England since the Beatles has released its last album, Goodbye by the Cream (Atlantic). This album maintains the high caliber of musicianship and individuality seen in previous Cream recordings. Most notable are the live performances; the individual strength of each member of the trio is evident and most enjoyable on these cuts. After two years of constant success in the pop music and acid-rock field, these young Britons have bid a very suitable and characteristic adieu.

Fine original material, strong instrumental work and exciting vocal and harmony make the debut album of Rhinoceros on Elektra one of the best recent rock releases. The group is slightly reminiscent of the recently disbanded Buffalo Springfield but with stronger r 'n' b influence. The highlights include "Apricot Brandy" and "I Will Serenade You."

Leonda-Woman of the Sun (Epic) presents a young female singer in the folk-blues idiom, performing mostly her own material. Leonda's striking vocal style is best suited to the blues numbers, and she is backed by a number of fine musicians.

Canned Heat is one of the more creative of the young rock groups dealing with the blues. Their music reveals a variety of influences, and their distinctive sound gives Canned Heat a validity not shared by those groups who vainly try to imitate the sound of black bluesmen. Living With the Blues (Liberty), their latest efforts, is a two-record set containing some of their finest work to date.

Another spinoff from the English whirl of pop recordings is This Was, by Jethro Tull (Reprise). Good listening with a mixture of many mouthfuls is the product from this combo. Notable among the selections are "Dharma for One" and "Serenade For One.' There is a bluesy feeling to this disc, and the riffs are camp but contemporary.

Music to read your comics by might be apt for Cartoone (Atlantic), which introduces a new British group by that name. A newsy blend of pop and blues sounds includes "Knick Knack Man," "Doing What Mama Said," and "See Me."

Doc Watson can be pardoned for picking out his first tunes on a homemade banjo. But the fact that his tremendous talent, rooted in the folk traditions of North Carolina, was sidetracked on rockabilly music is incredible. Doc has been a professional musician—a veritable wizard on the guitar, to be exact—but it was only in the early 60's that public taste enabled him to return to his neglected heritage. The Doc Watson Family (Folkways) features Doc, his brother, his wife Rose Lee, her father, and a neighbor. The result is relaxed and tuneful, the kind of ballads and family songs that are slowly and sadly giving way to recorded-to-order obsolescence.

Graffiti (ABC) is an album that'll put you on the edge of your head, and never let you off. A statement in electric rock by George Stunz, on St. John, Tony Taylor, Rickie Blakin and Steve Benderoth, Graffiti is more likely to send you climbing the walls than writing on them.

Ten Years After is a British combo rooted in the blues. Undead (Deram) presents the four in an exciting live performance. The group's emphasis is on instrumental work, featuring unusually good guitar and bass work, but the vocals are also above that of the average young rock-blues group.

BOOKS

Colorful are the land and people of Mexico; from its Indian and Spanish ancestry to its sparkling new skyscrapers, this growing country abounds with scenic beauty. Much of the color has been captured in Mexico (Hill & Wang), a pictorial study for the Terra Magica series. It is difficult to escape the charm of this country, even in a picture book. Edited by Hanns Reich and Hans Leuenberger, this beautiful volume is an enticing introduction or a sentimental reminder of the magic that is Mexico.

Japanese women have been admired for ages for their exquisite grace and beauty. These unique qualities are captured in woodblock prints, (or ukiyo-e) a favorite Japanese art form, in three new volumes of art reproductions. Each book bears the title of the artist—Utamaro containing only prints of beautiful women; Hiroshige, famous countryside views of early 19th century; and Harunobu, prints of women and actors. The black-and-white and color reproductions are large-size and include some rare prints seldom seen outside of Japan. Published by Kodansha International.

The correspondence of literary figures many times gives the most accurate picture of the man behind the pen. In Affectionately, T. S. Eliot (J. B. Lippincott and Co.), William Turner Levy reveals a great deal about the great poet. Dr. Levy, a priest in the Episcopal church as well as a professor of English at City College of New York, had a great deal of rapport with Mr. Eliot, a man dedicated to the same interests. This volume, therefore, leans greatly on their conversations on religion and literature. It is a penetrating look at one of the giants of modern English literature.

Folk music is a hardy medium, as is witnessed by Something to Sing About (Macmillan). Drawing on the experience and taste of such artists as Odetta, Bob Dylan, Mahalia Jackson and Joan Baez, Editor Milton Okum has put together a delightful volume of favorite songs. Although the selections are not new or unusual works, they are indeed the solid traditional favorites. The big plus in this volume is the fresh arrangements (for piano and guitar) that give the old songs a somewhat new appeal. Also, the book pictures each artist and gives notes on the songs. More than 70 selections.

Pressure from minority groups led the U. S. Department of Justice to ban the release of hoodlum Joe Valachi's first-person story — after the agency had urged the turncoat Mafia soldier to tell the whole story, and had allowed a journalist to visit Valachi in prison where he is serving time for murder. Nothing, however, could prevent the journalist, Peter Maas, from publishing his own account of interviews with Valachi. The result, The Valachi Papers (Putnam's) is a fascinating, factual, even cold history of the Mafia as lived by one of its lieutenants for three decades. Absorbing reading, and especially timely after the death of Genevese, head of the Syndicate, and the expected selection of his successor.

☐ Mated

Edited by Joseph Dow, M.D. The new, pictorial marital manual. All twelve chapters contain illustrations and/or photos of all aspects of married sexuality.

Of special interest, because of its uniqueness, is the chapter entitled Coital Positions, wherein seventy-eight different postures are described and thirty-five of the most popular are actually illustrated. No dolls are used, no other misleading or incomplete illustrations.

The chapter entitled Hygienic Products is of equal interest because of its uniqueness. It includes illustrations of such seldom-seen objects as vaginal inserts, artificial penes (dildos), French ticklers, clitoris stimulators, erection aids, female masturbation devices (including vibrators), penis-enlargement devices, breast development instruments, climax-withholding aids, penis extensions, douching devices, etc.

Other chapters include: Evolution of the Human Embryo; The Male Genital System; The Female Reproductive System; Abortion and Premature Labor; Coital Movements; Multiple Pregnancies; Anatomy of the Breasts; The Art of Love; Sterility and Impotence. Price only $5.00

☐ Pedophilia

A psycho-behavioral, geographical and historical study of adult-child sexual relations, by Dr. John F. Trimble. Twenty-one case-histories form the basis of Dr. Trimble's book.

These include: a lesbian actress and 11-year-old Mexican prostitutes; a girl trained by her mother to blackmail pedophilics; an incestuous mother-daughter relationship; childhood experiences with male pedophilic homosexuals; a soldier who used his 7-year-old step-daughter for sodomy; a sadistic matron and her sexual experiences with children.

Other chapters involve pedophilia's universal character; pedophilic behavior in America, the Orient, in Europe and in India; pedophilia and the law, the psychodynamics of pedophilia.

This is the most complete and up-to-date book on the subject. Fully illustrated, including color plates. $3.00.

Oral Love Volumes

☐ Entitled Cunnilingus and Fellatio, by John F. Trimble, Ph.D. The first book-length study on the subjects and the only illustrated volume available on cunnilingus and fellatio. Contains color plates as well as black/white illustrations.

All aspects of the two subjects are covered, including initiation, homosexual and heterosexual case-histories, childhood experiences, cunnilingus/fellatio as marriage aids, soixante-neuf (69) practices, lesbian techniques, historical aspects of c/f, adults initiating children (both girls and boys);

Reasons wives/husbands practice/oppose fellatio and cunnilingus, oral-genital fantasy-wishes, normal and abnormal techniques, extremes in love/hatred for c/f, prostitutes and fellatio, the compulsive fellatrice, sadism and masochism in oralgenitalism, the oral-erotic wife, teen-aged girls specializing in fellatio, etc. A Monogram book. $3.00.

☐ Entitled Fellatio. By Donald H. Gilmore, Ph.D. Fully illustrated volume, published by Monogram Books. Subtitled "A Study of Normal and Abnormal Oral Sex Behavior."

Chapters are entitled: Normal Erotic Stimulation, Fellatio in History, Oragenital Contacts in Childhood, Teen-Aged Fellatio, Oral Sex in Marriage, Fellatio Techniques, Abnormal Fixations, The Castration Complex, The Urge to Dominate, Obsession, The Prevention of Disease, Bizarre Cases, Guidelines to Normal Sexuality.

Twenty-nine case-histories are included, giving insight into people with marital problems caused by or solved by oral sex practices.

Subjects include: teen-ager girls submitting to fellatio to maintain their virginity, wives seeking divorces for such actions, other wives who seek fellatio out of marriage, kidnapped girls forced to perform fellatio by sex criminals, high school girls indulging in oral sex acts on teachers to obtain passing grades;

Women who obtain climaxes during acts of fellatio, women who prefer oral sex to coitus, sanctified oral sexuality, multiple fellatio (one girl and five boys), desire for oral sexuality caused by seeing parents or other adults in oral-genital acts, etc. $3.00.

☐ Bestiality in Men & Women

By David O. Cauldwell, M.D. A study of sex relations between humans and animals. Described are the animals used, reactions of both animals and humans, times and places where bestiality was legal, etc.

Case-histories include confessions from both men and women who have practiced sex acts with animals. These include a man and his mare; a 14-year-old girl and her collie; a man and his cow; a sex orgy which included three young women and three Russian wolfhounds.

Other reports include a man's experience in Morocco in which he describes adventures of men, women and children with various animals (including an 8-year-old girl and a dog as well as a woman and a donkey); a lady snake charmer and her pet eel; a married couple who use a dog in their sexual activities and a teen-aged girl and her pony.

An added bonus is a reprinting of A. Niemoeller's Bestiality and the Law, a historical study of bestiality during the past thousand years. Illustrations from many historical sources are included. $3.00.

☐ Pornography

By David O. Cauldwell, M.D. Pornography, like all evil, seems to be in the eye of the beholder. No doubt someone will find evil in this book, probably because it is possible to present today, words and phrases as well as illustrations which would have been suppressed only a few years ago.

Dr. Cauldwell strips away all false notions and impressions regarding the subject and replaces them with facts and logic. Not a single word has been removed from the original printing which successfully withstood attacks by the Post Office to bar it from the mails.

Included in this publishing is a reprinting of an example of classical Japanese erotica — The Nightless City. This, too, is presented in completely unexpurgated form.

The drawings and photos incorporated indicate the varying concepts of pornography, both past and present. Also included are examples of erotic offerings from countries where pornography is legal. $3.00.

☐ Female Masturbation

A new printing of Dr. G. Lombard Kelly's monograph on this generally suppressed aspect of feminine sexuality, as well as studies by other prominent medical men.

Chapters are entitled: Female Masturbation by G. Lombard Kelly, M.D.; Auto-Erotism in the Female by Edwin Hirsch, M.D.; Artificial Erotism by J. Richardson Parke, M.D.; Childhood v. Adult Masturbation by Bernard Bauer, M.D.; Masturbation in Girls by Albert Moll, M.D.; Curing Masturbation With Hypnosis by A. von Schrenck-Notzing, M.D.; Self-Masturbating Girls by Barbara Hoffman.

Subjects include: initial experiences, psychic effects, historical aspects, the use of artificial penes and other instruments, lesbian masturbation, normal and abnormal masturbation, techniques employed, frequency, causes and cures, evils of masturbation—real and imagined, masturbation as a sex crime deterrent, psychic auto-erotism, urethral masturbation, personal confessions, etc.

Fully illustrated with historical as well as contemporary drawings and photos of techniques, postures, masturbatory objects, etc. Price $3.00.

The Commies have trained these sirens to do their spying on their backs. . . .

RED CHINA'S Special Detail SPY WHORES

by Malcolm Rollins with Hoyt McAfee

Red China resorts to a lot of huff and puff to try to convince the outside world that it has brought about "revolutionary sexual reforms" throughout the nation. One boastful claim: No more free love anywhere in the country, not even in one-time wild-and-spicy Shangai. Prostitution outlawed. All adult females in China engaged in "socially productive pursuits." Red China propagandists fill the airwaves and newspaper columns with more hogwash about how "our country, under Chairman Mao-Tse-Tung, now has a morally clean climate." O. K. reader, at this point you're perfectly justified in emitting a yawn. A big one! For I (Malcolm Rollins) can testify—on the basis of what I saw, learned and experienced in Peking recently—that the Red Chinese are the world's biggest hypocrites about sex. Those males who can still cut the mustard seize upon any and every opportunity to bed down with the "merry girls." Only today they do their sex capering on the sly, behind a smokescreen of hypocrisy. For example, block wardens in each village and city are delegated to keep an eye on the movements and moral behavior of all the people in their particular areas. Which means that they really function as spies—informers—for Red China's all-pervasive intelligence agency (the Social Affairs Department). No matter, the wardens can—disenchanted persons assured me—be induced (for a wad of "cumishaw," or graft money) to see, hear, and report no evil. Suppose a dozen or more of the party faithful (dedicated Mao Communists) decide to kick over the traces and have a round of "unorthodox fun" in their neighborhood. A merry fling complete with "in-the-mood" girls (also devoted Mao followers). Well, they first pass the hat among themselves and collect loot to soothe the block warden's "conscience." A Communist party member in good standing hands it over to him in a quiet place. After which the males and their female comrades meet in a large, centrally-located house and, disregarding Chairman Mao's moral preachments for an evening, help themselves to a "blast of Hsing-Yu" (sex pleasure).

Females shed their dreary, coverall work suits. Chinese men respond to basic, age-old urges of the flesh: and pinch the bosoms, pat the fannies, and rub the stomachs of the "merry girls" (attending the neighborhood sex-feast). Within a short time fired-up couples start drifting off into convenient bedrooms. What goes on there for the rest of the night differs none from the behavior of American guys and their gals who go to a hot-pillow motel for a "wahoo tear"—sex fling.

But I was fascinated most of all by the activities of Peking's special detail girls. What are they? I'll tell you in plain language—they're a bunch of fancy whores masquerading as "patriotic servants of New China!" Old-hatchet-faced Kang Sheng, Red China's all-powerful spy master, has a flock of them circulating among the key diplomats — young and older — assigned to Peking.

But the wily Sheng and his top aides would angrily deny that they trained the "special detail" girls in the arts and seduction of spying—then turned them loose, secretly, on Peking's steadily-expanding diplomatic colony. In conversations I held with a near-dozen of the more experienced diplomats (men of savvy and a sense of humor as well), they made several points clear. To list them:

1. They caught on, immediately after their arrival in Peking, to the tricks, pitches, and snares of Kang Sheng's "whoopee girls."

2. Most of these hip diplomats play along with the Red Chinese tempters — actually pamper them. But in so doing, they feed them considerable amounts of obscure and difficult-to-check information: none of it damaging or high-voltage stuff.

3. One worldly, 37-year-old diplomat from Europe confided to me with a grin: "Hell, Chinese girls—no matter how much you try to indoctrinate them with Communism—are too basically sexy to set the spy league on fire. Their human weaknesses, the calls of the flesh, tell them to go ahead and have a hot time in bed with that attractive man (whether an East Asian or a Westerner). . . . And this, in turn, often causes them to muff a spying assignment.

"Understand me clearly," he hastened to add, "they can be hellcats—really dangerous on occasion. But an experienced man—a discerning one especially—can handle even these types. He simply conveys the impression that he's hot for them; and that it would be a treat to snuggle up to them in bed.

"I've seen that technique work on the best of these special detail (secret agent) females in Peking. Seen it make them more interested in some good loving in bed than in snooping around for secrets which might—or might not—be useful to Red China's spy bosses."

As best as I could determine, between 65 and 70 of these merry female spies frequent the haunts favored by foreign diplomats in Peking. Their Big Chief—the increasingly powerful Kang Sheng—holds forth in a dusty, run-down building at 15 Bow String Alley. He, the alleged No. 5 man in Red China's Politburo, presides over a far-flung empire of espionage and intelligence-gathering.

He even recruits reporters from the New China News Agency and gives them important espionage assignments to perform in 54 countries around the world. That explains why they seldom attend a press conference or file a dispatch.

As Director of the Social Affairs Department, Sheng answers in theory to Premier Chou En Lai but in reality only to Chairman Mao-Tse-Tung. To understand the enormous power he wields, his position in Red China corresponds to that held by FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover, to the head of Central Intelligence Agency, and to the influence enjoyed by a member of the American President's National Security Council!

This grim-faced, conniving man — Kang Sheng — was the first to denounce Soviet Russia as "weak-kneed" in its dealings with the West, particularly the United States. At an all-Communist international parley he also lambasted Russia as a "shifty friend" of Red China and derided the U. S. as a "paper tiger."

But for all his scheming and trickery, no credit belongs to him for the creation—and launching—of Peking's merry "special detail"

Lannie

You'd never know it to look at her, but Lannie had some weight trouble a couple of years ago. Nothing blubbery, you understand. She'd never be mistaken for Bertha the Circus Fat Lady, but she had enough excess flesh to make her feel mentally encumbered, a handicap when you're one of the city's top-ranked fashion models. With a great show of will power, she put herself on a strict health food diet that she conceived herself. "Are you a believer in the heavy use of leafy food as some dieticians recommend?" we asked. "Watercress-tion to ask," she smiled. "I certainly am. Carrots, celery and rhubarb are also some of my mainstays whenever I feel a little too much bounce when I jounce during my daily jogging stint. I do stationery running in my apartment and real jogging in Central Park." She explained that moderate exercise is excellent as an aid to dieters,

From The Secret Files Of A PRIVATE EYE

Adulterers, perverts, queers, and weirdos are some of the characters in these actual case histories. . . .

by Frank Daly
(As told to Sam Ewing)

You say you want to know how some people get so involved with sin and sex? Well, you came to the right guy!

I've been a private detective, working the San Francisco Bay area for 23 years, and it's been one long stag show. Sometimes good for a laugh. Sometimes sordid. But never dull.

As a quick estimate, I figure I've startled, rousted and photographed enough naked bodies in so-called "compromising positions" in hotels and motels to pack a public beach; I've seen enough booze guzzled to fill a kidney-shaped swimming pool! and I've smelled enough marijuana to send a regiment on a trip around the moon and back. But that's just part of the story.

I'm an old fashioned kind of gumshoe who never adapted to electronic snooping. The only "bugs" I work with are of the two-legged variety. Yet I like to think I get results.

Take Doctor and Mrs. 862 (my case file number) as an example. The good doctor's take home pay is over 50,000 clackers a year, which buys a lot of meat and potatoes. They have everything, it would appear—including a home in the swank St. Francis Woods and a saucy, 22-year-old daughter who loves to romp on the swinging scene with white boots and pot. (Continued on the following page.)

Karen's her name, and her thing is to drive 160 miles down the coast for love-ins at Big Sur. As a ye-ye flower chick, first class, she'll shed her petals and inhibitions at the drop of a reefer among the 1000 or so turned-on flower people around there.

Fifty bucks a day and expenses didn't come easy on that particular case.

In order to locate this live one, I had to blend in with the scenery by cultivating a week's growth of whiskers and by putting on a cossack shirt, leather pants and sandals.

To bridge the language barrier, I had to make with the hip jargon, such as "Where's Karen the Kitten at?"

The kooks responded. They knew her alright. One cat in a poncho described her as "Sugar and spice, and blonde all over, man. She's the living end of Big Sewer."

Eventually I traced Karen to a Volkswagen bus with psychedelic painting on it. She and a hip girl friend were shacked with a couple of bearded barefoots.

It took a threat of disinheritance along with the promise of a new Corvette to haul Karen out of the loving arms of Eros and back into those of her worried folks. Your guess is as good as mine as to how long she'll stay put.

From time to time, my sleuthing involves perversion. In my unorthodox way I strive to help some of those social misfits who have little screws loose in their heads. Although I don't like these types of cases, they do help to pay the rent.

On this type of assignment, at family request, I've scared a number of characters damned-near witless. I'm talking about the nutties who turn on by making obscene phone calls, peep through keyholes, or by dropping their clammy hands on young girls' or boys' thighs in darkened movie houses.

Typical of this odd breed was Edgar, a pharmacist. He had a regular habit of touring the neighborhood and scanning for half-drawn window shades so as to ogle any ladies in the state of undress

He'd tell his wife, "I'm going for a little walk, so I can think things out." Yeah, sure!

Curiously enough, Edgar was married to a dish who could qualify as an art school model herself. It beats me why he was so hung up on strange bodies. But, as a matter of fact, it was she who hired me, with money saved from her household fund, to throw some naked fear into hubby.

She explained she loved Edgar a lot, that he was the best husband there ever was, and a good provider.

"Just a little sick," she said nervously.

The little woman had followed Edgar on several of his nocturnal jaunts to watch him peer at the pretties, but she didn't want him to know that she knew. And she was afraid that the police would put the arm on him at any time, and that would be the ball game.

I used the shock technique on Peeping Edgar that I've used with other weirdos of his strip. It seems to work as a permanent cure.

One evening I shadowed Edgar when he stepped out to get his kicks. Pretty soon he set up his eyeball shop in an alley running beside a nurses home about six blocks from his house.

Edgar was zeroed in on a couple of partly-dressed angels of mercy, visible through an open window, when I moved in.

Now, I'm the type of individual I wouldn't care to meet in a dark alley. I'm big and beefy, with a mashed-in nose, and far from being the glamor-boy type.

With sudden surprise force I grabbed skinny Edgard by the shirt front and lifted him back on his heels.

"Get lost, creep!" I snarled into his face, which was about two inches from mine. His face quickly turned sheet-white. "If I catch you gawking at the broads again, I'm going to bust you up good!"

Then I gave him a shove that sent him stumbling a dozen feet. You can believe me, he hurried home like he was wearing electrically charged underwear and it had short-circuited.

About four nights later, his curiosity got the better of his good judgment, and he ventured out again. I repeated the therapy, with a punch to his stomach thrown in. His lovely wife reports he's been a model mate ever since. Come evening, you've never seen a guy who goes for the robe and slippers bit like Edgar.

Some of the Gay Boys seem quite normal most of the time, working at normal jobs, even having normal wives and families. But—when the wife is away—out comes the lingerie. And the man of the house is soon getting bigger sexual thrills out of seeing himself in sheer, lacy underthings in a full-length mirror, than he would out of seeing the same garments on Raquel Welch, an arm's length away.

Mr. Case File 911, a well-known lawyer (you've seen his name and face in the newspapers many times) is a transvestite.

With some embarrassment, he employed me because he was in a tight spot. A limp-wrist laddie was threatening to blackmail him—and the fag had pictures.

Although I disapprove of strong-arm stuff, it comes in handy now and then. I cornered the rouged rogue on a house boat moored near Sausalito. It's there that you'll find an entire fairyland that's grown up right in the Establishment's midst. Two missing teeth and some tears later, the fruitcake

LISA

Okay, you're a movie producer and gorgeous Lisa struts through your door eager to get into pictures. So what kind of role do you think of for her? A seductive secret agent perhaps. Maybe a glamorous suburban hostess involved in intrigue. Perhaps a fluffy, light comedy role where Lisa's many charms can be exploited fully. But not the producer who was in charge of Lisa's first low budget epic. He cast her as a motorcycle policeman in a flicker called "Justice on Wheels." Not as a police-woman, mind you, a police*man*! Casting Lisa as a man is like casting Wally Cox as the Boston Strangler. In addition, the danger in placing Lisa on a motorcycle is obvious. She kept toppling off the bike.

Finally he saw the light and switched Lisa to the other side of the law. She plays a very hardened (that's hard to believe; softened is a better word) moll heading a ring of female pockpockets. Can you imagine Lisa nuzzling near you in an elevator to hoist your wallet and other valuables? (Who would mind?)

In the movie, Lisa is pinched at a cocktail party when she tries to steal a bejewelled cummerbund from a rotund police commissioner. A struggle ensues. Shots are fired. Lisa is shot in the fracas. Fortunately she is fully dressed at the time and the wound doesn't show. She is sentenced to six months in a new co-educational prison for cummerbund snatching. But Lisa gets that old penitentiary ailment—she becomes stir-crazy. Her big scene occurs at the climax of the film when she decides to mastermind a jailbreak. She gathers all her cellmates around her and bares her plan. Her henchwomen are with her all the way—Sally the Snitch, Molly the Mugger, Wanda the Whip, all of them. At the high point of the action, Lisa, her prison blouse torn away after a struggle with one of the guards, thrusts herself against the bars and shouts, "It's a bust-out!" And it was, men, it certainly was. □

SEXY GIRLS LIKE TO EAT

A survey reveals a strong connection between lunch and the libido, or to put it another way, between the menu and mattress play. . . .

by Carl H. Giles

Men who sigh at their dates' dinner tabs shouldn't. Girls who marvel over every morsel on the menu are quite companionable away from the dining table. A new psychological sex study says there is a definite relationship between lunch and the libido. Women who enjoy food the most have a very high sexual response.

'One of the best predictors of a woman's being able to enjoy sex," one of the researchers said, "is her ability to enjoy food." Although the two appetites have never been linked before, history reinforces the proximity between the kitchen and the boudoir. An orgy even in Roman times was lacking if the tables were not loaded with fine foods. In fact, it was not unusual that a damsel was served on a platter along with the other goodies.

John Adams once said prior to his election as second president that a man's first desire was a good meal and the second a good woman. This same theme is scrawled on the walls of caves in Western Europe. The hunt came first, and Neanderthal man didn't get restless until he saw some shapely Amazon cavorting around the cave. Then he wised up and found that women could help cook the kills.

Prior to this study conducted by the State University of New York Upstate Medical Center in Syracuse, man has always thought only foods with strong aphrodisiac

ACAPULCO
She was blonde, beautiful and willing—everything a guy ever dreamed about—but then came the nightmare. . . .

by Dean Dexter

I met Bianca at a party given by a friend who tossed a little orgy for a visiting Hollywood celebrity at his home in Acapaulco. I walked in the room and looked around and saw this girl. Like the fellow said, every man has loved her somewhere, the trick is to find her. I could feel my throat thicken. I was surprised at the effect she had on me.

Bianca was about 37-21-35, with no visible scars. She was wearing a light beige dress at this afternoon party, and she had a deep tan and the blonde hair that hung across her forehead was still golden from the summer sun. She must have felt me staring at her because she looked up, calm, clear, and as still as a three-quarter-grain Nembutal. She looked directly into my eyes, then nodded her head in acknowledgement of the look, neither smiling nor giving anything away. then she turned back to listen to what her companion was saying. I thought, I should be ashamed of myself. A reader of Jim Murray, an admirer of Voltaire, an advocate of straight bourbon whiskey and no women on fishing trips or in poker games, to stand at two o'clock in the afternoon and lust after this shapely, flat-bellied, soft, warm-looking girl. I couldn't take my eyes off her.

A little later we were introduced and we both accepted the introduction gravely. Then

LILI

Horace Greeley said it best when he advised: "Go west, young man, go west." That's where men are men and you can meet girls like our Lili of the Valley. Lili was bitten by the horse bug during a recent stay at the Saddle Sores Dude Ranch. Her first experience wasn't what you'd call successful. "I was making my first gallop and suddenly a tall string of bushes leaped up in front of me. I wanted to make a quick stop; the horse wanted to jump over." What happened, we asked. "The horse tossed me for it." Well, we're willing to listen to old jokes if they come from a transplanted Easterner like Lili who has fallen in love with the West.

She says it's true that the men are more rugged in horse country. Romance is everywhere. "I had two boy friends at the same time," Lili said. "Both were big Texans who were fast on the drawl. Then they both left me to form a trick riding act with two bow-legged cowgirls." What next, we wanted to know? "Just have to get another pair of chaps," she smiled, bidding us goodbye.

"No, Greg, not here! I don't feel right about it!"

qualities had any effect on sex drives. And man has been trying to seduce woman with exotic foods for thousands of years. Although man has experimented with herbs and potions, he has never concocted a recipe that really works. Some chemicals and seasonings do induce strong sexual desires, but most are illegal, dangerous, or both.

The year-long study included 42 married women with an average age of about 26 years. Many were wives of students, and all had the minimum of a high school education. They were given a series of tests during the year. One of them questioned the women concerning 221 items on food enjoyment.

They were asked how well they liked several foods, how much they had enjoyed dining in some instances in the past, and about the cooking skills of their mothers. The report made at the recent 38th annual meeting of the Eastern Psychological Association in Boston revealed several other factors concerning how to determine how much some women enjoy sex.

Women with a low level of angry tension like sex better than girls who are nervous and easily frustrated. Girls who are highly nervous and easily frustrated often end up frustrating men, it seems. Calm, rational women are more prone to eat that way also. Waiters note that the high strung type seem to gulp their food down instead of relishing it.

Sports-minded girls usually have hearty appetites. They have a lot of energy and burn up calories. They appreciate good food. This would tend to support also the report's finding that girls who are physical also like physical sex.

"They also get satisfaction from using the musculature of the body," the study said. "They're active, like vigorous exercise and outdoor activities."

Girls who really enjoy food aren't necessarily gourmets by any means. Fancy meals don't have any more effect on the ability to enjoy them. It all depends on the lady's taste buds. She may go for meat and potatoes like most men. Another indication that the girls with sensitive palates probably aren't the platter or hors d'oeuvres types is that they are active and need heartier fare to keep up their pace.

Another factor for the bachelor to consider on the eating theme is that girls who like to cook often like to eat real well. They nibble and taste as they prepare dishes. Hep bachelors that dine their dates in their apartments should stress what is on the table rather than the decor and the smoking candle routine.

"We concluded," the researchers said at the convention, "that the ability to enjoy sex is part of a general ability to enjoy the world, to see the world as a fairly friendly place, as stimulating, enjoying, arousing."

Guys who gape at girls who can put away the groceries and still retain their shapely assets should put their menus and mattresses into prospective perspective. Some of the sexiest starlets in Hollywood are renowned in the swank restaurants—and probably anywhere else there's food—for the amount they eat. And the way that they enjoy it. □

In that case, Dearie, it was a gas! to shove him around a little.

Maybe people gamble because the pop-up toaster doesn't pop, because the electric shaver chews up their skin, or because the toilet won't flush. Some of them gamble to get rich. And some gamble because they can't help it.

Miss Dimpled Knees — I'll call her that because I remember well that particular part of her anatomy — gambled because she loved gambling. And that's what brought her to my office.

She'd been losing heavily at an illegal joint in Twin Peaks, she said, flashing those lovely legs with the dimples winking at me. She couldn't pony up the dough, she pouted, and Sal, the club owner had plans for taking it out of her skin, literally. His idea was for her to make regular payments on her back. Otherwise, he'd rough her up.

Contrary to detective fiction, private eyes do not work against the cops. Take my word for it, we get a lot farther working with them. Thus, a telephone call to my good friend Kelly, who's highly placed on the San Francisco police force settled Sal's hash pretty fast. He's closed up now, and out of town.

In her gratitude, Miss Dimpled Knees planted a big kiss on my homely mug.

"I don't earn enough money to pay you any cash," she cooed. "But perhaps we can work out some other arrangement."

I tell you, I meet all kinds! □

For a brief few hours the sailor and the girl forgot their loneliness. . . .

ONE NIGHT STAND

by Robert Walter

In the center of the circular bar was a high, slowly revolving stage on which a woman sat playing popular songs on an electric organ. She was an ordinary-looking, almost drab woman with skinny arms and stringy, graying hair curled at the ends. She did not often look at the people sitting at the bar as she turned round on her little island, but when she did, they seemed without her glasses to be very far away. She dutifully returned a smile for a smile and answered all requests. She never stopped playing and she never stopped turning, and as people came and went again into the night, as face replaced face, she sometimes felt that she was the only thing in the Melody Bar that did not change.

Early one evening a sailor with nothing to do was sitting at the bar. The bartender had served him a second glass of beer and was pouring a second shot of whiskey to go with it. "You know, the damnedest thing happened to me one time," said the sailor. "Sometimes I have the feeling that it never really happened, that it was all a dream I had. But then, there's the pictures." He produced his billfold and took out a picture, rather, a strip of four small pictures, the kind taken by a self-photo camera for a quarter. He handed them to the bartender. The pictures, faded and yellowed and cracked from handling, were of a very pretty girl.

The sailor said, "Sometimes I think, well, maybe I found the pictures and made the whole thing up."

The bartender looked at the pictures indifferently and returned them to the sailor. He did not say anything. He had seen a lot of sailors' pictures.

"It was down in Charleston, South Carolina," said the sailor, "a couple of years ago. . . ."

. . . He was standing on the corner that night, waiting for a bus. The buses weren't running very often; it was late. He had been alone and lonely all evening, going from one bar to another, looking for a girl; in fact, for almost anything at that point. Now he was on his way to an address some guy had given him. He was leaning on the bus stop sign, watching the traffic light changing back and forth from red to green, regularly, silently, as if it were starting and stopping ghost cars in the empty street.

He turned to find that a girl had appeared and was standing nearby. The two of them observed each other; without speaking, they said hello.

"You look like someone I used to know," said the girl.

"You look like someone I've been looking for," he said.

And suddenly they were closer together, but he wasn't sure which one had moved.

"Are you stationed here?" she asked.

"No, we're just in port for a few days."

"I'm just here for a week myself."

"Oh, you don't live here?"

"No, I'm visiting my aunt," she replied. She had a Southern accent. "I've never been here before. I always heard that it was very nice in the spring and the early summer . . . before it gets hot."

She smiled. She was lovely; small-featured and delicate; almost fragile. He watched her changing back and forth from red to green, changing with the light. If he touched her, he thought, he would leave a mark.

In the distance could be seen the lights of an oncoming bus.

"I only have tonight," he said.

The bus drew up to the curb in front of them; the door opened and closed; and it pulled away, leaving the two of them still standing there in the empty street.

He was never sure how he got there, but the next thing he knew he and the girl who said her name was Lillian were on a lighted Ferris wheel at the beach, rising high above the palm trees into the night, with the music of a calliope closer and louder than the sound of the moonlit ocean. At the very top, he closed his eyes and kissed her and it felt as if they were swinging from the sky.

Back on earth again, they took their own pictures in a little curtained booth, sitting on a wooden seat with a bad painting of a tropical beach on the wall behind them. They looked at the pictures together and laughed.

"I want yours," he said.

"Why?" she asked. "You'll never see me again."

"Or course I will."

"No, I'm only someone you met at the bus stop."

"We had to meet somewhere."

She glanced at him uncertainly. "They don't even look like me," she said. Then she handed him the strip of pictures.

They danced to music from a jukebox in a pavilion on the beach, crowded with sailors and their girls. The place was lighted with blue lights in an attempt to make it romantic. Beer and soft drink signs were tacked to the wooden uprights. Young couples sat making love on the railing, silhouetted against the shimmering ocean.

"You haven't told me where you're from," he said.

"Oh—" she looked away for a moment—"a little place called Lonelyville."

"That's a funny name."

"I guess it is."

"My home town's got a funny name too. It's called Four Corners. It's a funny town. The trolley car tracks still run right down the main street but there hasn't been a trolley run on them for about twenty-five years. The people just don't want them taken up. And there's an old stone bridge out at the edge of town that nobody ever uses. When they widened the highway, they built a new bridge but they never tore the old one down And it's still standing out there over the creek, just connecting two fields." He looked at her. " I wish we were there now. I'd take you out to see that old bridge."

He thought he saw tears come into her eyes. She put her face to his.

They were dancing closely, hardly moving, when all at once he felt her whole body stiffen as if a current had passed through her. She stopped dancing. Over near the jukebox he noticed a policeman and a matronlike woman wearing a dark suit and hat scanning the crowded dance floor.

"Let's go somewhere," she said in an unnatural voice, drawing him ever closer to her, "somewhere where we can be alone."

They went to a hotel that catered to sailors and their girls and were given a small hot room with only one window that opened onto a musty-smelling air shaft. There was a single overhead light; there were no chairs.

They sat across from each other on the narrow bed, temporarily shy, now that they were alone.

"I feel cheap," she said. "I've never been in a place like this before, least of all with a stranger."

"I believe you," he said, "but I don't believe your name is Lillian."

"Oh," she said, surprised. "Why?"

"You don't look like a Lillian."

She laughed. "Who do I look like?"

"I don't know. A Janet or a Joan."

She smiled to herself, strangely amused, and lay back on the bed.

If you'll examine Susan in more than a perfunctory manner, you're sure to detect what can safely be called a restless quality, an air of vitality, of eager exploration. For Susan is not one of those Lazy Susans you have heard about. In fact, you might describe her as a Scintillating Susie, one who finds it difficult to keep herself occupied between her many assignments as a stocking model for one of the largest mail order houses in the world. "I tried chess and that lasted for all of three weeks," she said, prowling around the room restlessly. "I began to feel it a big, crashing bore. Rooks, Bishops, Pawns, Queens that can only move this way and that. Check and checkmate and all that jazz." She then heaved a deep sigh, inhaling mightily. She didn't realize, of course, that this was one of our hobbies—watching girls such as herself inhale mightily. "Then I tried numismatics and philately. I kept dropping the coins and the stamps kept getting stuck to my fingers and other areas of my body." We murmured that should Susan have stamps on her body, it would have to be a special delivery package. "Next I went in for horticulture and I even tried horology." What!? we screamed. "Yes," she explained, "horology, the art of measuring time and constructing time pieces." Oh, we said, heaving our own sigh of relief. "Now," said Susan, "I'm doing the astronomy bit. I get an occasional kick when I study the stars and see some unusual activities when they're in conjunction." We said that once we had a telescope and trained it on an apartment building where two Hollywood stars lived and we caught some very unusual activities. She smiled. "But now I'm bored again. I need a hobby." We thought she said hubby and suggested ourselves. She smiled again—actually it was more of a derisive laugh. Then Susan showed us the door. It wasn't very interesting so we left but we promised to return if we could think of some new interesting hobbies for her. Now, let's see. . . . □

Smorgasbord Sexualis

An item in Atlas indicates that faith, hope and gullibility are not yet dead. A Dusseldorf firm has contracted with the Yugoslavian government to bottle and export water from a most curious, wondrous spring, located in the rugged mountains of Bosnia. Last year the previously unheard of spa was visited by an Italian doctor who disclosed to the world the following astounding good news: "A man drinking this water would not only get an erection but keep this erection for long periods of conjugal jousting." The Atlas story continues, "All this year thousands of foreign men have flocked to Kladanj. Germans in particular have hurried to taste its marvels; their Mercedes' and Volkswagens breaking to bits on the abominable road."

Answer: Kinsey didn't study that variable.

Answer: I didn't study the Kinsey data with that point in mind, but to the best of my memory from reading both volumes there is no data on balustrade sex.

TO HELL WITH MARRIAGE MANUALS

These cunnubial "how-to-do-its," claims our writer, are a menace to the well-being of every man. . . .

by Palmer Lane

I happened to spot this book on top of a married friend's dressing table and since the party was getting loud and nearly everybody was pretty well bagged, I slipped it into my pocket because the title intrigued me: "Nine New Ways To Sexual Pleasure."

It was one of these manuals that explain kisses and caresses and apparently my friend and his wife had seen fit to study before practicing their homework. I had never seen one of these passion pamphlets before, but after reading that one I went out and bought a half dozen. And, men, I'm against letting women see these boudoir Baedekers.

I mean, who needs them? Let the women learn from us. I don't want them setting impossible standards. I like sex as well as the next man (more, if I've got the correct dope on the guy who's next to me right now), but I don't like to read about the clinical details and I wouldn't want any wife or sweetie of mine reading them. Sort of cuts the heart out of the romance.

I can just picture the people who write these bedroom brochures. They're an old couple, hitting 60 or 65, and they're reliving their fantasies of dreams that never were and setting them down as Robert's Rules of Orders for rollicking roisterers.

All I ever got from these books is envious, until I realized that the man-and-wife team (usually a Dr. and a Mrs. Something) are putting me on strong. In short, they're lying, man.

In every book there was a chapter about a guy complaining because his sex drive was diminishing. He was despondent and blue because he wasn't getting the same old bang out of life. It appeared in "The Importance of Foreplay, Fiveplay, Sixplay, Everybody Play." It went something like this:

"This man came to my office, a worn-out, tired, cheerless nobody. He said he was now 49 years old and his potency was diminishing. He said he now only had relations with his wife once a day and twice on Sundays. You could see he was in trouble. So I questioned him thoroughly and found he had been driving himself too hard. I suggested he cut down on his work at the office and also give up his part-time job as a brick layer. I also suggested he take deep breathing exercises and do a few squats and sit-ups. In no time at all, he was his vigorous, masculine self."

You get the idea. This guy is 49 and was worried about losing his drive and he was three times more active than anybody in Kinsey. And get the doctor. "Deep breathing exercises and squats and sit-ups." Should the squats and sit-ups be done alone, or shall we get some shapely companions, doc? Get lost, you quack!

Can you imagine that kind of information getting into the hands of a housewife who always thought she was pretty well satisfied?

I walked around fretting for three months worrying because I was afraid I might bump into this tired 49-year-old and he would taunt me because I wasn't keeping score like he was in his beaten-up, shabby, rundown state.

I can just see the sissy doctor and his ugly wife laughing like hell as they toss darts into wax likenesses of healthy men and women.

"Well, that should louse up a few good relationships," he cackles, as she spits another tooth out the window.

And how about the recommendations for better technique, as they call it. One book, "Position Is Everything in Life" devoted 345 pages to this facet of conjugal activities. Now this kind of stuff is pure fiction, unless it was written by a pair of Persian acrobats. If anyone tried to perform the feats detailed here he'd be making an application for a truss-fitting in two days. I mean this is the jungle.

There's another book out now that's going big in the read-'em-and-sleep set. It's written by an old Indian and if he practiced what he printed it's a wonder he lived to become an old Indian. This gives descriptive names to the innovations such as "the tree," "the snake," "the albatross" (there's one that stirs the imagination) and "the camel." As far as I'm concerned, this Indian was a fake fakir.

Another book told all about how to perform the "spinning top." I read the first two pages of this carnal epic and the book fell out of my trembling hands. This whirling dervish bit which some woman-hating old hermit envisioned is enough to put a hard-working man on the shelf for a week.

The big point is, of course, that while I know a book never corrupted anyone, I don't think our women should be allowed to read these things. For one thing, she'll believe them. I know a beautiful blonde who takes the printed words so seriously she's saving her pennies to buy Orphan Annie a new dress. She and countless other women, who long had been content with their mates, will now become discontented. And if she doesn't happen to be married to the guy, you can rest assured he'll be minus one playmate in no time flat.

"Well," a wife will say, pointing at the book, "if he can do it, why can't you?"

Try to explain that the guy is a creep, a fake and possibly a 60-year-old soprano and all you'll get is a cold stare, a stamped foot and you're shut out for the night, pal.

And you know how women go for fads. Any new gimmick is jumped on by the fair sex. A new style, new cigarette, anything—they want to try it. What are they going to do when they read these books and have their eyes opened to such things as "Going To Boston," and "No Holds Barred." If your mate is influenced by these as I knew she will be, better lay in a good supply of linment, Charley.

Summing it up men, it's okay to try some or all of these things as you see fit, but for the sake of your health and happiness just don't let the women get their hands on those manuals. □

ing diplomats I had met. We encountered those enticing spies everywhere we went—the "special detail" girls, all of them wearing high heels, split-skirts, and man-bait perfume (and remember, the great masses of Red Chinese women are denounced and ostracized if they dress that way)!

So chalk up another piece of hypocrisy to the Red Chinese High Command. As those Big Wheels visualize it, a special group of girls can wear sexy attire, engage in illicit sex relations with diplomats from "decadent nations," and violate the moral code in its entirety —under the guise of "patriotic servants of the state!"

It amused me to learn that the "special detail" cuddlers shy away from two of Red China's best friends — the diplomats from Albania and Fidel Castro's Cuba. Why? One of the merry girls (Lily Chang Wi) confided to me with a chuckle: "They big cheap skates. Treat us Chinese girls like tramps."

She had learned French, and we talked in that language (which I speak better than English). Lily had come to me with the expectation of wringing useful bits of information out of me—in bed. I had no secrets to spill, but tried to make up for that by flattering and loving her ardently.

While we were stretched out in the sack, she laughingly revealed these juicy morsels: (1) Peking Radio sometimes flashes messages to the "special detail" girls via songs. Thus the playing of "Volga Boatman" means — snuggle up to that Russian diplomat today. A rendition of "The Last Time I Saw Paris"—bounce over to that French diplomat's hideout. And the playing of "Canadian Sunset" — find out if the top Canadian diplomat will spill what he knows about American rocket and missile bases.

In Bern, Switzerland, the Red Chinese maintain what amounts to a fantastic "diplomatic" mission—one consisting of 204 members! Most of them fan out and engage in feverish spying activities. So how do the spy chiefs in Peking react to that kind of "Swiss hospitality"

Four of Peking's "special detail" girls assured me that they're under orders to pamper, sweeten up, and shack up with Swiss diplomats and commercial attaches "steadily" in the confident hope that they—the Swiss — will pass along vital secrets about America's nuclear weapons, secrets which have been made available to them at Geneva nuclear-disarmament conferences.

To add my own postcript: Peking's "special detail" girls may never set the world of fire as espionage agents. But, by golly, they deserve an A-plus for their accomplishments as Sex Kittens! □

"Do you think I'm different from other people?" she asked.

"You're different from everybody. You're what I've been looking for all my life."

She was staring at a place on the wall where someone had written: Jack & Edna, Oct. 19, 1963.

"I was married once," she said. "But I'm not supposed to remember it. I was married and I was very happy until I had a baby. It was born dead. I can talk about it now; I couldn't for a long time. It affected my mind and they had to put me in a home. They said I'd never be right again, so my husband divorced me. It wasn't his fault. You see, it was because that's what they told him. But they were wrong. I did recover. I'm all right now." She stopped and studied him for a moment. "When I look at you a certain way—you look like him."

Then, for some reason, she quickly covered her face with the sheet.

"Hold me close and kiss me," she cried with sudden passion. "Be gentle . . . tell me you love me even though you'll never see me again . . . give me a baby . . . I would like that more than anything. . . ." He kissed her through the sheet. Her body was hungry, starved. "Oh, love. . . ."

And later, just their voices in the darkness:

"I miss you already, before I even leave you," he said, "while I'm still here beside you."

"I miss you too."

"I love you."

"Yes . . . but it's like that bridge between two fields you mentioned. It doesn't go anywhere; it just crosses a creek. There are a lot of bridges like that. Between your world and mine; between dream and reality; between hello and good-by."

"It's funny, you remembering about that bridge—"

When he awoke that morning in the dark, hot, airless room, he did not know where he was. Then he remembered the girl and turned on the light. He was alone. She was gone. Maybe it had only been a dream. But then he saw the lipstick on the sheet, and felt a strange emptiness in his heart that had never been there before.

As the woman playing the electric organ slowly turned round on the stage in the middle of the circular bar, she was thinking: Is this what it was to lead to? Is this what it was for? — those hours every Thursday afternoon at old Miss Branthafer's that started when she was ten; the exercises and the scales; the ringed brown birdlike hands of Miss Branthafer that reached out and took hold of her own thin little wrists and arched them above the keys; the very proper voice that used to say, "Let's play it through again from the very beginning, Florence." What would Miss Branthafer say if she knew?

The sailor watched the bartender pour him another shot. "I don't know how many times I've written," he said, "but the letters always come back marked Unknown. There isn't even any place called Lonelyville." He picked up the drink unsteadily. "As I said before, if I didn't have these pictures of her, I'd think maybe it never really happened or it was just a dream I had."

"If I were you," said the bartender, "I'd throw those pictures away."

The sailor sat then, looking at the woman playing the electric organ on the revolving stage. Their eyes met for a moment but they did not see each other.

The sailor sat there for a while, then he took the worn strip of pictures from his billfold. He stared at the yellowed photos of the girl against the painted tropical beach. Then he tore up the strip of pictures, dropped the pieces on the floor, got up and walked out of the bar.

The bartender looked after him and shook his head. "I wonder how many people who sit at bars are waiting for a face they saw once before," he said.

The woman playing the electric organ glanced at her watch. She went round a few times in silence. What did I do wrong, Miss Branthafer? I always tried to do my best. I wanted you to be proud of me. Then she broke into 'When the Red Red Robin Comes Bob Bob Bobbing Along.' □

"Actually, it started with a fetish."

A newcomer to our country, Cecilia almost got in trouble with the authorities just as soon as she got off the boat. Battling a language barrier with the help of an interpreter, Cecilia said the man behind the desk at customs said he wanted to see what was in her trunks. She was surprised, of course, but since she had read so much about America's love for beautiful women and also our rigid inspection laws, Cecilia began hoisting her skirts to show the man exactly what was inside her trunks. Well, sir, if it hadn't been for the fast action of the interpreter (a spoil sport if ever there was one), Cecilia might have spent her first day in America doing a lot of tall explaining to the magistrate. However, as it turned out, she never showed exactly what was inside her trunks officially, but you can get an unofficial glimpse here.

Cecilia likes America and is impressed with the speed and the tempo which prevails. "Everybody's rushing," she said, adding with a smile, "but then, I'm always Russian, too." As you can see, she's doing her best to overcome the language barrier.

She is pleased with the country's contrast between men and women. "In Russia everyone is alike. Men, women work side-by-side in factories and on farms. They wear the same clothes. When clothes are being removed it is almost like opening a surprise package. You don't know if you'll find a man or a woman inside."

She also likes this country's relatively warm weather. "Clothes are such a burden," she said, suiting action to her words. By unburdening herself, she definitely will add a few degrees to our normal temperatures. As the weatherman might say, "There's a warm front moving in from Russia." Warm and lovely, too. □

I led her over to the bar for a drink and we sat and looked at each other. She absolutely radiated sex, as she gave me a smile I could feel in my inside pocket.

"You'd better stop looking at me like that," she said softly. "If you go on much more like that, I won't forget what you look like. You'll be up for mental rape and I'll have to identify you."

We just sat and inspected each other. We both liked what we saw, but I only had enough time to find out where she was staying and tell her what time I'd pick her up that night when her companion came to claim her.

The wealthy people and the movie stars, when they come to this gem called Acapulco that nestles on the western slopes of Mexico and dips its feet in the blue Pacific, stay at either the Villa Vera or the Acapulco Towers up in the hills. The Villa Vera where Bianca was staying was owned by an ex-husband of Hedy Lamarr's, and looked down on the big hotels along the beach which did nicely for the hoi polloi, so many of whom were honeymooners that the Number One song played by Acapulco orchestras was a cha-cha version of the Wedding March.

I'd been around Acapulco for some time now, writing another book every time my agent put the pressure on me, but mostly fishing and relaxing. I had my own home here and my own boat, but so rapid had been the development of this famed resort that a lot of my friends who valued serenity were now fleeing to Zihuantanejo where there was no night life, no notable restaurants, and fewer than a hundred rooms for guests.

Bianca was ready to go when I entered her hotel suite. She whirled around me, showing off a new Mexican hand-painted skirt. I went over to the corner bar and mixed a couple of martinis and watched admiringly as she selected necklaces and other highly expensive women's junk out of a large lacquered jewel-box.

Then I looked out of the large window at the sun that was just setting over the Pacific, and it looked like the beginnings of a truly great evening.

"Well, Coop," she asked, "where are we going to eat?"

"Leave it to me."

She glided over and our first physical knowledge of each other was when she kissed me at the base of my throat where my sport shirt was open.

"That's what I like—a man who knows where he's going. And another thing I like—I like to feel the pulse in your neck jump when I kiss it."

She waltzed around the room with her glass, her skirt flaring out and showing those shapely legs and thighs. Above the expanse of golden tan satiny skin I could see some lace-edged sheer black panties. But more than her legs, I couldn't stop watching her eyes. They shone brighter than all that mess of jewels she wore.

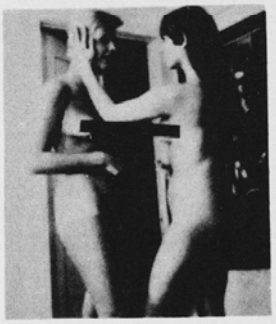
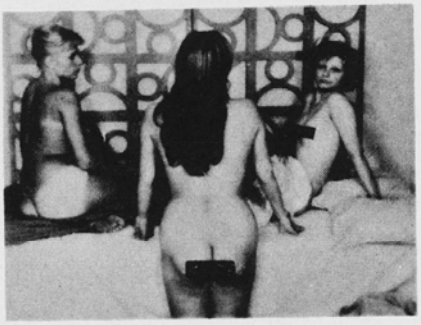
Gay Sisters





WHAT HER "TEACHERS" DIDN'T KNOW ABOUT THE EXOTIC... SHE TAUGHT THEM!

Neighbors in the Southern California city called them the Gay Sisters — the pair in the secluded house down the block. But Deborah and Sandy were beyond all care as they shared their most intimate desires within their sensual world, devotees to the pursuit of physical sensations.

When their advertisement brought the delicate beauty named Elicia to their door, they couldn't believe the shy teenager's innocent desire to share their sensate world, to be slave to their unbridled demands.

But their "student" became their teacher as this wanton nymphet became passion's mistress, enslaving the sisters to her own sensual demands.

The Weight Watcher

"as long as you don't burn up so much energy you have to stuff yourself with carbohydrates to undo all the good you've done." She said sweets are the downfall of all would-be weight reducers. There is actually a term for compulsive candy-eaters, she informed us. "They're called chocolate-aholics." She said that these people, usually women, go on a diet but then when tense or irritated, go on a sweet-eating bender. They actually hide chocolate bars and peanut brittle in chandeliers, bureau drawers and other secret places just as Ray Milland hid his jugs of booze in the "Lost Weekend." One such woman was alone in her Brooklyn apartment when she began to get the urge for sweets. It was Sunday though, and all the stores were closed. She was frantic. She searched high and low, but no chocolates. Not even a half-eaten Baby Ruth. With a flash of inspiration born of desperation, the women got on the phone, called Western Union and had a Candygram sent to herself! But for our dough, Lannie is sweet enough. □

when they're in Acapulco. The staff made like they were welcoming the Queen of England when Bianca floated in. We went through the works, all paprika and gypsy violins. The champagne was good, but it didn't sparkle half as brightly as Bianca's eyes.

After the meal, we drove to a new nightclub. The management was featuring a new jazz group from New Orleans and I had promised to give them a listen.

It was worth the trip. What those coolies did with How High the Moon really gassed us. Around midnight we left to drive some other place.

"Where to now, Coop?"

Seeing the windflow in her hair in my open Jag, and the electric glitter of her eyes, I was tempted to say: "Let's go over to my place and I'll tell you a bedtime story that'll have you between the sheets before you know what happened," but I didn't. I didn't feel so bold as to make a pass right then. It was time to box cleverly. A man has no idea, no idea whatsoever, how girls think from one minute to the next. So a man should presume nothing.

She sat there and looked at me: a look of innocence and content and deep trust and compassion. This is the great moment in every man's life—when he sees a girl looking at him like that. He has love. And I wanted, more than I ever wanted anything in my life, to hold onto it—with this girl. This could be important.

"How about Las Brisas?" I said. "There's a good band playing there."

It was crowded. The musicians were tearing through some Latin music, but when the leader spotted us he made the next number San Francisco, especially for me.

We sat through the next set because it was too crowded to dance, and we were just finishing a drink when Mort bounced over from another table and looked at us admiringly.

"You beautiful people," he burbled. "Let's go to a party."

"Which party?"

"Melchior and Marguerita are having a party in Puerto Marques," he said. "Know their place?"

Know it? Of course I knew it. It was right next door to former President Aleman's house that had the mosaic pavement that runs right down to the water's edge.

I looked at Bianca. She nodded.

"Okay," I said.

We got into our various cars in the parking lot and roared out, racing bumper to bumper along the beach road to Puerto Marques, a small fishing village beyond Acapulco in the direction of the airport, where the set-up is much less glossy than in Las Brisas.

Marguerita greeted us amiably and we mingled. Her parties were famous for the contrasting guests. Some of them were former hoodlums, grafters, racketeers turned respectable Las Vegas "business executives," and the rest were movie people, industrialists and the pillar of American society. It's never dull at Puerto Marques.

There were a lot of Hollywood people there. All the men were seven feet tall and the girls had callouses on their derrieres from working on the love-bench overtime. I ran into my ex-wife from Beverly Hills with an AC-DC actor who kept running off at the mouth about his personal experiences with a club of crazy young Swiss coeds who only surrendered their bodies on the tops of mountain peaks.

One Hollywood actor was making a somewhat drunken speech about women. "The English girls are the best," he exclaimed loudly. "The streets are full of them and they'll do anything for a couple of quid. You may have heard that the French are in a class by themselves, but discounting the brothel shows, they are nothing exceptional. Greek girls have greasy skins—too much olive oil in the diet, maybe. Berlin, they're all fat. You find bad teeth everywhere except in Amerira. In Cairo they have clean young boys they recommend instead of the women. I can't say I agree with them because making love to a boy is not very romantic."

A beautiful dark-skinned Eurasian girl I knew who wasted neither time nor tears in living and loving it up with a handsome Indian fakir who wheels and dealed in everything from hot cameras to cool chicks, walked up to the actor and rubbed herself orgasmically against him, and wanted to know in a strident voice if he had ever tried Javanese women.

A fat guy with rings on his fingers was stroking the keyboard of the corner grand, and a girl trying to look like Julie London husked Cry Me A River. A drunken actor on the downgrade belted an agent in the face, and an up-and-coming singer with a Sinatra-complex ripped the clothes off a big-bosomed starlet and tossed her into the floodlit pool. Business as usual. . . .

At dawn we sat in patio chairs on the terrace and watched the sun climb out of the wet, grey hills to the east. The butler brought us breakfast on a tray.

We were both cockeyed when we left, singing oldies and wide awake.

"I know," Bianca said brightly. "Let's go to Nexpa and swim. I always wanted to go there and swim."

So we drove south to Nexpa and swam on a deserted beach. The water was cool and the sunlight warm as it trickled across the water like honey spill on a blue velvet dress. Bianca's blonde hair shone in the sunlight and her body was phosphorescent in the clear water. She swam near to tme and pretended to have a cramp. I grabbed her as I was intended to do. Her skin was warm and silky smooth and her mouth was salty, and the clear white brandy we had been drinking on our way down to Nexpa had done things to our libidoes.

What a short journey it is to passion. I picked her up in my arms and carried her to a secluded cove in the rocks. She was a considerate and inventive lover, and afterwards we talked with the soft, kind truth that only new lovers have.

"It's wonderful when there's no license—no blood test—no three-day wait," she said as her eyes sparkled. Her voice was low and close; she had discarded the banter with her inhibitions.

"Women always want love affairs to go on forever and ever," she said. "Why aren't we clever enough just to enjoy it on a day-to-day basis?"

"Love is just a state of mind," I said, grinning.

There was a note of alarm in her voice. "It has to be more than that."

I held a cigarette against her lips. "A mortal's attempt to define infinity," I said.

She inhaled and then the smoke swirled around her face for an instant as she blew it out. She said: "Sometimes two people see each other just for an instant, perhaps from a moving train, and there's a rapport. It's not sex, it's not love, it's a sort of magical fourth dimension of living. You never saw him before, you'll never see him again; you don't even intend to 'try because it doesn't matter. Everything that is wise, I mean, that is good, that is understanding and profound, in the two of you becomes real at that instant."

"My old man gave me two pieces of advice," I said. "Never loan money to men who try to fill inside straights, or go to bed with a woman who keeps a diary. You are beginning to make noises like a diary keeper. It's time I faded." But I made no move, other than to kiss her between those two eye-opening breasts.

Then Bianca had another bright idea. Tequila and tonic water in a little cantina at the end of the peninsula in a little fishing village.

We parked alongside the yacht basin and then she had yet another brighter idea. The harbor looked blue and warm and inviting, and she insisted we charter a cabin cruiser and have lunch out on the water.

I bought her a bikini in a little shop and she changed into it in the back. Then we stocked up with goodies and a basket of wine at a waterfront store as she rippled along, ogled by passers-by who admired both her scanty Bikini without and her body within. Her body was beautiful and almost every luscious millimeter was open for inspection, as it wasn't really a little bikini she was wearing; it was an engineering job.

It was beautiful out there, with the coast dropping out of sight. Bianca made herself useful around the boat and fixed the food and poured the wine while I stayed at the wheel.

Late in the afternoon I shut off the engine and we swam in the deep, blue water, then we climbed back aboard and relaxed in the sun to dry off. Then we drank some more wine and made love in our own world, a million miles from anywhere.

The sun was heading for the horizon when I decided to set the course back to the yacht harbor. But I had misjudged the currents, those crazy currents sweeping all the way down the Pacific Coast from Alaska, and found that we had been swept miles off our course.

As day turned to night the sea became choppy and we were farther away from the coast than ever. It would take all night to get back.

I decided to break the news to Bianca.

"Sorry, you gorgeous creature, you, but we'll never make it back in this sea. Good thing we brought enough food and drink to last us over until breakfast. Only thing to do now is to nose back as well as we can. Don't worry. We're going to have a great night out here."

I had been concentrating on the wheel and not looking at her. Now her voice cracked like a bullwhip.

"Don't worry, the man says! Don't worry! Why, you stupid jerk, what do you mean by bringing me out here and then telling me I have to spend the night on this lousy boat?"

"Take it easy, baby," I said, never realizing what was coming next.

"Why, you goddamned fool!" she yelled. "You two-bit, miserable son-of-a-bitch!"

Then a stream of obscenities. I looked at Bianca. Wonderful, marvelous Bianca. My girl, the exciting creature with eyes that shone like real diamonds.

But the eyes were not shining now. They looked like dull bits of flint, and the skin around them had turned a bad mushroom shade. Her hair, made stringy by the ocean air, lay coated against her head like a mangy dog's.

And her mouth was twitching horribly. This was a creature I had never seen, even in a nightmare.

"Why, you bastard!" the apparition screamed. "Why did I ever let myself get mixed up with a square like you? You don't understand, do you? You wouldn't understand if you lived another million years. It's never hapened to you, has it? A guy like you never goes around with a spare fix in his pocket."

She bent over double, swayed backwards on her knees and she looked at me with naked hatred.

"I said a fix. You wouldn't have one," she sneered. "No, you're the clean-living, deep-sea fishing type. You get your kicks square. I hate you! I hate your gusts! Do you hear? I hate you! I hate you!"

I understood now, but there wasn't a thing I could do. The symptoms were plain enough—heroin.

"You got me aboard this goddamned boat before I could even think," she whimpered. "I didn't even remember to pack!"

Her nude body shuddered, convulsed. It looked like the beginning of another truly great night. □

The names of screen stars when converted to Chinese billing on Hong Kong theater marquees come out objectified, if not caricatured. A crown colony informant tells us that Elizabeth Taylor's ideograph started out as "The Beautiful Girl," and later "The Beautiful Woman," and now emerges as "The Fleshy Woman."

"Dear Abby," writes an aroused sexagenarian to the famous lovelorn columnist, "I'm sick of reading about dirty old men. How about dirty old women? I am a bachelor, 65 years of age, and I can tell you that a man who isn't in a wheel chair isn't safe alone anymore. I went on a cruise for relaxation and the women nearly ran me crazy. I had 60-year-old women propositioning me for early dates, late dates and late-late dates. I got all sorts of gifts, and one old dame even offered me money! Not only that, but a 24-year-old kid passed me a note, 'What are you saving it for, Dad The Prom?' I even had them trying to break into my room at night. Maybe I'm old-fashioned, but I still like to do the asking, but nowadays you don't get the chance. They ask you first."

A new underground dating service for turned-on people bills itself as "F.U.K., a division of Underground Enterprises." When you sample the questionnaire of this matchmaking subsidiary, you suspect that heads are doing the matching. Like:

Age (not counting previous lives):

Length of sexual organ, extended (Males only):

Measurements, unpadded (Females only):

Favorite sexual positions:

Which of the following have you used? a) Grass? b) Hash? c) Acid? d) STP) e) Yoga? f) Transcendental meditation? g) Speed? h) Goofballs? i) Opium? j) Skag? k) Mescaline? l) Others?

Have you ever balled under any of the above? Which ones?

Have you filled out this application while (circle one or more) a) Straight? b) Stoned? c) Tripping? d) Balling?

The mating service charges $5 for guys, $2 for chicks, but warns that checks and money orders must be made out to Underground Enterprises, and not to its corporative arm, F.U.K. "After all," they slyly note, "we don't want to F.U.K. up our bank account."
